Dear Dr. von Hauenschild,

Let me thank you so much for your letter of August 27th. To me living in a far off corner of the world on the border of the "great unknown" (i.e. Russia) it is exceedingly stimulating to have connections with that part of the globe in which I am especially interested.

I am thankful to have you keeping me à jour with your country's so interesting archaeology through your own works. During these later years I have entirely occupied myself with Mexico but, naturally enough, without being able to forget my early love altogether.

Asking me to give my opinion on your works I am afraid I won't be very helpful as I believe it should be done by an expert. I can only make a statement in princip and of what I have seen so far it counts A one.

My colleague at the Gothenburg Museum dr. Stig Rydén is the right man, and very likely you are already in touch with him. I am now metaphorically speaking, going to leave the world for some time to make a visit to the far off and little known early history of the Guerrero mountains, that is to say to work out the collections from my latest journey. Only when this is done do I dare to hope to see again the American coast rise above the horizon. It depends on the general situation in the world, it certainly doesn't look very promising.

Heartiest greetings

Yours sincerely,

Digvad Linné
